1. In late 1949 a Russian Institute was established between Kiangnan and Hongkew District, Shanghai. It was originally known as the Revolutionary University. In May 1954 there were approximately 2,500 Chinese students attending. All were given an intensive course in the Russian language as well as a thorough Chinese Communist political indoctrination. The head of the institute was MA (fnu), a Chinese Communist Party (CCP) member who can neither speak nor read Russian. The assistant head was HSIA (fnu), who is not a CCP member. Educated in Vladivostok, HSIA speaks and reads Russian fluently. There were about 60 Russian emigrant instructors and about 60 assistant Chinese instructors. Usually one Russian emigrant instructor and one Chinese assistant instructor were assigned to a class. Shortly after the establishment of the institute, an unidentified woman arrived from the USSR to be its technical adviser. She returned to the USSR in late 1953 and has not been replaced. The length of the course in 1954 was three and one half years. Originally it was one and one half years and was later increased to two and one half years. Classes were from 8:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. daily, except Sunday, with one hour for lunch. The names of some of the Russian emigrant instructors at the institute were as follows: Kolesnichenko (fnu), Romyantsev (fnu), Lopatina (fnu), Glengenhaus (fnu), and Frubaugh (fnu).
2. In May 1954 the Futan University had four faculties: Medical, Engineering, Biology, and Foreign Languages. The length of the medical course was five years. The length of the biology course was two years. The head of the Foreign Lan-
